

BRITISH COLUMBIA POLITICAL SCENE

BC Liberals, NDP Virtually Even as Views on Carole James Improve

NDP BC leader posts significant gains on momentum and attributes, while Gordon Campbell fails to get a bounce after televised debate.

[VANCOUVER – May 8, 2009] - With less than a week to go before voters in British Columbia elect the members of the Legislative Assembly, the two main contenders are locked in a tight race that could be defined by turnout patterns and the soft support for the Green Party, a new Angus Reid Strategies poll for CTV and the Globe and Mail has found.

The unique online survey of a representative provincial sample of 1,013 British Columbia adults—which showed each respondent the candidates who will be on the ballot in their specific constituency on May 12—finds that the governing BC Liberals can count on the support of 44 per cent of decided voters next Tuesday (+2 since late April), followed closely by the opposition New Democratic Party (NDP) with 42 per cent (+3). This is the first time in the history of polling in Canada that respondents have been asked to choose from the actual list of candidates in their riding.

The Green Party remains in third place with 10 per cent (-3), followed by the BC Conservative party with two per cent (-1). However, the BC Conservatives are only fielding 24 candidates, and are at 8 per cent in the ridings where they are running. The remaining two per cent of decided voters would cast a ballot for an independent or other candidate in their riding.

KEY FINDINGS

- Voting Intention Among Decided Voters: BC Liberals 44%, BC NDP 42%, Green 10%, BC Con. 2%
- Voting Intention Among Absolutely Certain Voters: BC Liberals 44%, BC NDP 43%, Green 8%, BC Con. 2%
- Preferred Premier: Gordon Campbell 43%, Carole James 30%, Jane Sterk 4%, Not sure 23%
- Momentum Score: Gordon Campbell -29, Carole James =, Jane Sterk +4

Full topline results are at the end of this release

From May 5 to May 6, 2009 Angus Reid Strategies conducted an online survey among a randomly selected, representative sample of 1,013 adult residents of British Columbia who are Angus Reid Forum panelists. The margin of error—which measures sampling variability—is +/- 3.1%, 19 times out of 20. The results have been statistically weighted according to the most current education, age, gender and region Census data to ensure a sample representative of the entire adult population of British Columbia. Discrepancies in or between totals are due to rounding.

Turnout continues to be one of the key elements in this provincial election. When the views of respondents who are absolutely certain to cast a ballot on May 12 are assessed, the BC Liberals are ahead by a single point (44% to 43% for the BC NDP), with the Greens at eight per cent, and the BC Conservatives at 2% per cent.

Demographics

The gender gap that was evident in the middle of the campaign has narrowed drastically as the election draws near. Among male respondents, the BC Liberals hold a five-point lead over the NDP (47% to 42%). Among women, the NDP now has a two-point edge over the governing party (42% to 40%).

Across all age demographics, the BC Liberals and the NDP are also very close to each other, with the NDP slightly ahead of the BC Liberals among young voters—aged 18 to 34—and the BC Liberals with a small lead among respondents aged 34 to 54, and those over the age of 55.

The regional breakdowns show the NDP with a commanding lead in Vancouver Island (51% to 40% for the BC Liberals) and a smaller advantage in the Interior (42% to 39%). The numbers show a significant drop for the BC Liberals, who got 45 per cent of the vote in the Interior in 2005.

The BC Liberals remain on top of the NDP in Vancouver and Suburbs (45% to 41%), while in Surrey and the Fraser Valley their lead is larger (49% to 36%). These results are not significantly different from the last election. In Northern BC, the governing party holds a six-point lead (44% to 38%). Still, this is a region where the BC Liberals came close to getting half of the vote in 2005.

Most supporters of either of the two main parties say they are not likely to change their mind before election day, with 71 per cent of BC Liberal voters and 66 per cent of NDP voters planning to keep their current choice until May 12. However, only 33 per cent of Green Party voters are definitely going to vote for that party. The Green Party's share of the vote has dropped since late April, and uncertain Green voters are twice as likely to list the NDP as their second choice (36%) than the BC Liberals (17%).

Leadership

While the approval rating of the three provincial leaders remains below the 40 per cent mark, an improvement for BC NDP leader Carole James is clearly noticeable. Her approval rating stands at 36 per cent—up nine points since late April—while 42 per cent of respondents (-7) disapprove of her performance.

Premier and BC Liberal leader Gordon Campbell remains stagnant on this question. More than a third of respondents (36%, +1) approve of his performance, and 51 per cent (-2) disapprove. Green Party leader

Jane Sterk posts a net approval score of -3 (18% approve, 21% disapprove) but three-in-five respondents (61%) do not have an opinion on her.

On the momentum question, James also posted better numbers, with 24 per cent of respondents saying their opinion of the BC NDP leader improved, and 24 per cent saying it worsened. In contrast, Campbell posted a momentum score of -29, with more than a third of respondents (37%) saying their views on the sitting premier have worsened. Sterk once again posted a positive score (+4), but a third of respondents are undecided.

Campbell remains ahead when British Columbians are asked who would be their best Premier (43%), followed by James (30%) and Sterk (4%). Campbell's showing in this question is in tune with his party's numbers among both decided and absolutely certain voters, while James remains below the BC NDP's total in both scenarios.

Despite his lead as the preferred premier, Campbell continues to struggle on certain issues. Campbell is still regarded as being best suited to deal with the economy (50%, compared to 22% for James), and crime (39% to 24% for James). James remains ahead on education (48% to Campbell's 26%) and health care (47% to 27% for Campbell) and has opened a significant lead on the environment (39% to 25%). In each of these categories, James's score improved by at least six points since late April.

British Columbians remain divided on which leader is most likely to possess certain key attributes of leadership. Gordon Campbell is ahead on having a vision for the future of British Columbia (57% to James's 52%), being a strong and decisive leader (53% to James's 27%) and inspiring confidence (33% to James's 25%).

The premier is also ahead on a negative category. Almost three-in-five respondents (58%) believe the sitting premier is patronizing, compared to only 21 per cent for James.

On the other hand James is more likely to be regarded as honest and trustworthy (48% to Campbell's 21%), and as a person who understands the problems of people in BC (54% to Campbell's 35%) and generally agrees with people on the issues they care about (43% to 33%).

The Debate

Among respondents who watched last Sunday's debate, Carole James emerged as the clear winner, with 44 per cent of debate watchers claiming their opinion of the BC NDP leader improved after watching the televised showdown, compared with 23 per cent for Sterk and five per cent for Campbell.

The premier was, by far, the worst performer. Half of respondents (51%) say their opinion of Campbell worsened after watching the debate, compared to 22 per cent for Sterk and 17 per cent for James.

Better off?

Respondents were asked whether they would personally be better off, worse off, or about the same under three different prospective premiers. The score for Campbell is -26 (14% think they would be better off, 30% believe they would be worse off), while James posted a -15 (24% better off, 39% worse off). Sterk also scored -26 (8% better off, 34% worse off).

Time for a Change

Almost half of British Columbians (47%) believe that it is time for a change in BC and that a different party should be elected into power, while 43 per cent feel that the BC Liberals should be re-elected. When Gordon Campbell's name was added to the question, 39 per cent of respondents thought "Gordon Campbell should be re-elected" while 48 per cent said it was time for a different premier.

STV

Awareness of the referendum on electoral reform has risen in the last week with only nine per cent of people "not aware at all" (-8), while those who are "very aware" have increased to 57 per cent (+12). This rise in awareness seems to have lowered the chances of BC-STV being implemented in the next provincial election. Support for the existing system is at 55 per cent (+8) while BC-STV attracts the support of 45 per cent of voters (-8). Amongst those "absolutely certain to vote," the existing system leads with 56 per cent.

Issue

The most important issue facing British Columbia continues to be the economy (39%, +2 since late April), followed by Crime/Public Safety (11%, -2), health care (10%, =) and the environment (9%, -1). Among BC Liberal voters, the economy jumps to 54 per cent as the top issue, while poverty remains a key concern for NDP voters at 13 per cent.

Choices

Overall, 66 per cent of respondents claim to be satisfied (14% very satisfied, 42% moderately satisfied) with the choices they have in this provincial election, while 39 per cent are dissatisfied (15 very dissatisfied, 24% moderately dissatisfied).
